A Refereed (Peer-Reviewed) Bi-Annual Research Journal

About the Journal:

Literary Critique is a peer-reviewed academic journal published under the auspices of the Postgraduate Department of English. The department has always fostered a pedagogy that challenges hegemonic structures, and the journal is an extension of this similar vision. It is managed and guided by a team of researchers from various universities and colleges. These renowned researchers from diverse disciplines and geographical regions ensure a balanced and inclusive review process. The journal is committed to fostering critical inquiry that interrogates established paradigms and foregrounds marginalised voices. By encouraging interdisciplinary approaches and theoretical innovation, it aims to contribute meaningfully to contemporary academic conversations.

Aim:

The journal, Literary Critique, aims to provide a high-quality platform for the dissemination of original research in the field of English literature and language. The journal seeks to nurture a culture of critical inquiry and aesthetic appreciation among scholars, academicians, and literary thinkers. It envisions enriching academic discourse with society oriented criticism, rigorous scholarship, interdisciplinary engagement, and innovative theoretical perspectives that challenge and broaden conventional boundaries of interpretation.
